The God We've Created Michele Longo O'Donnell

This is an in-depth presentation of the true nature of God. This is the place and nature from which we have emerged and therefore who we really are. Why is this important and how does it relate to our present circumstances? We live our lives according to our present image of ourselves and that, as it turns out, is directly connected to our assessment of the nature of God. We accept or reject pain and suffering according to how we believe God sees us. Thus we discover that our present vulnerability to agony and tears is a learned experience. Mankind as a whole has been taught to accept random suffering as a normal consequence of living. As this collective human belief is individually corrected, we will find that man was not created for pain and anguish, nor is he vulnerable to it. This book is a journey of understanding of both how we fell into this dark night and how we must arise out from under the rubble of its teachings.
