EXCERPT:

"Okay, Sawyer, what's the perfect solution then?" I asked. "What could possibly make me forget about everything I saw earlier today?"

He walked up to me, steady like a freight train, until our mouths held in limbo mere inches apart. The faint musk of an expensive cologne permeated off his warm skin and into my lungs. I swallowed the lump in my throat but it came right back.

"Me," he said. He lifted his hand to my face, twirling a strand of blonde hair around his fingers. "I could make you forget he ever existed."
